We're in the Army now

It's summer at the yard and the flies are running amok. You've done everything you can to protect your horse so he's as happy as can be, however, denied their usual target the pesky insects are trying their luck with you instead. Spraying yourself with insect repellent is an option, but let's face it, it doesn't smell great and can get a bit sticky in hot weather. So how about this for a solution...

Created initially for holiday wear such as sarongs, Armywear is a unique 'intelligent fabric' that, when moved, creates a force field that repels mosquitoes, midges and other flying insects. Powered by a patented technological advance known as ifabric technology, it releases a fresh smelling and long lasting natural insect repelling vapour, that is safe for all the family.

During normal use, Armywear remains active, creating a comforting, protective 'no-bite-zone' (of about 50cm) around you, providing up to three hours of protection from biting insects. Armywear can be kept active by your body movement or rubbing whenever required, and what's more, its pleasant lavender scent you'll smell pre

Armywear branded products have been tested and proven to provide continuous protection against mosquitoes, midges, stable flies and other unwelcome insects. Dr Nigel I Entomologist at the London School of Tropical Medicine states: "It's a new concept in personal protection from biting insects and it performed very well in our tests. Armywear insect repellent fabrics, this product is impregnated with fresh repellent dyes, giving long-term protection without the need to continually add more chemical."

Worn as an armband, neckerchief or anklet, Armywear fabric could be the answer to your midge problem this summer. So, for a fashionable and effective way to keep the flies away, get yourself a little Armywear.
